“ My mother was strong in character. During her lifetime she persevered in adversity, right up to the time her weak heart just couldn't keep up. I have always admired her for this trait and strive to have that kind of inner strength. My mother was funny in humor. I loved how she was able to laugh at herself. We have so many funny sayings or lines from those events that happened and would recite them to one another in a particular situation just to make us laugh. I will miss laughing with her. My mother was smart. She loved to learn and keep up as best she could with technology. She did really well on her computer for her generation. She took several classes at the community college on various topics, one of which was writing. Out of that effort came her book, Growing Up Boonville. This book was completed in the last year. So, she never stopped learning. My mother was incredibly creative. She loved to decorate. She was really good with color, texture and shape. She taught me to scrap book and we did that once a week on Tuesday nights for many years. I believe the 20 copies of the Frasier cook book was our most gratifying accomplishment together and we had such a great time working on it. That cook book is a such treasure for me now. My mother was so loving and proud of her family. She just adored her grandchildren and now her great grand children. She would drop anything she'd be doing just to see her family. Since I was the only child in town, I saw our mom the most. I believe it causes me to miss her the most as we have been accustomed to having her around....and she will be greatly missed. “ We loved Nancy. I think of her every day walking through my home. She helped to decorate many of my hutches as she had the knack for decorating.
A funny story I think about was probably over 25 years ago. My daughter, Katie spent time with Nancy and her girlfriend Amanda (Grand daughter of Nancy) . Amanda called her grandmother, Grammy. So Katie started calling her Grammy too. Amanda was mad at Katie for this and told her this was her Grammy and not Katie's! We still chuckle in this.
Nancy was always so upbeat and fun to be around. We will miss her and we know she will be watching over her family.
