“Dar was one of my first bosses when I rejoined Monsanto in St Louis in 1980. I had been away at the University of Missouri at Rolla completing my PhD in Chemical Engineering. I remember many long discussions with Dar on English grammar and writing styles. When Dar became a manager he purchased a copy of Webster’s Instant Word Guide for everyone in his group. My copy still sits in the bookcase by my desk. The book is almost 40 years old. I learned more about writing reports and technical papers from Dar than I did from all of my previous English teachers. I remember being on assignment in New Jersey managing a series of tests at Hazards Research labs. After many weeks on site, it was Dar not my immediate supervisor who called me to ask: “Where is your passport?” No one else had nerve enough to call. The plan was for a change of clothes, airline tickets, money and my passport to be sent via courier so I could leave the next day for Europe. Dar relented and allowed me a week at home, I eventually was sent to Europe for a problem at a Monsanto site. I remember Dar and I sitting in his living room playing Candy Land with his daughter. She always won (maybe a little cheating but who knows)! Carol, if you read this short note, Dar was a good man and an excellent engineer. He will be missed.

Thank you Dr Freeman. This is his son, Rob. I would turn in homework and my teachers would ask who taught this to you? Then, where did he go to school? Thank you for the great story!

“ I was fortunate to work with Dar at CH2M HILL around 2008-2012. Dar was very smart, picking up new technology very quickly and helping clients and coworkers a lot. Above all, Dar was cheerful, optimistic, just all-around nice. It was a pleasure to know him.

Jim, I greatly appreciate the comment about him quickly picking up new tech. When he worked with you he was in his 70s. Can you imagine?!? I am 54 and I have to remember what day it is. Thank goodness for the I phone. He loved the i phone

“ It is with great sorrow I learned of the passing of Darwin Novak. Dar was always ready to help with any kind of work that had to be done He never required any kind of thanks. For example, when Al Larson passed away he gladly helped in going through many of Al's papers and determined which should be saved, He was a delight to know. I could always depend on him to lend a helpful hand.
